Open Science Statement

I am committed to integrating open sciences practices in all my empirical research projects. This includes making openly available and without any restriction on the Open Science Framework: anonymized datasets, script of statistical analyses, and materials (i.e., experimental inductions and measurement scales). This also entails differentiating exploratory from confirmatory studies, the later being systematically preregistered. I pay also great attention in making all my manuscripts accessible on public repositories, in accordance with the Plan S for open access supported by the European Union.

Transmitting these good practices to my master's students and during my lessons is central to my teaching. Last, I am also committed to systematically suggesting to the authors I am collaborating with, and to the authors I am reviewing or editing, to implement open science practices.
